

FLU

- What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood, which flushes guilty in your face? Dryden.
At once, array'd
In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows. Thomson's Spring, l. 95.
4. To shine. Obsolete.
A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.
- To FLUSH. v. a.
1. To colour; to redden.
The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms. Addis. Cato.
Some court, or secret corner seek,
Nor flush with flame the passing virgin's cheek. Gay's Triv.
2. To elate; to elevate.
A prosperous people, flushed with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence. Literbury's Sermons.
- FLUSH. adj.
1. Fresh; full of vigour.
He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save heav'n? Shak.
I love to wear cloths that are flush,
Not preface old rags with plush. Cleaveland.
2. Affluent; abounding. A cant word.
Lord Strut was not very flush in ready, either to go to law or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail. Arbutnot.
- FLUSH. n. f. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow.
Never had any man such a loss, cries a widower, in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife. L'Estrange.
The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the coats of the arteries themselves. Roy.
Success may give him a present flush of joy; but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring. Rogers's Sermons.
2. Cards all of a fort.
To FLU'STER. v. a. [from To flush.] To make hot and rosy with drinking; to make half drunk.
Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night flusher'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Shakespeare's Othello.
- FLUTE. n. f. [flute, flute, French; fluyt, Dutch.]
1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.
Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke. Shak. Ant. and Cleo.
The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute. Dryden.
2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.
To FLUTE. v. a. To cut columns into hollows.
To FLUTTER. v. n. [ploten, Saxon; flutter, French.]
1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.
As an eagle stirreth up her nest, flutters over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him. Deutr. xxxii. 11.
When your hands untie these strings,
Think you've an angel by the wings;
One that gladly will be nigh,
'To wait upon each morning-light;
'To flutter in the balmy air
Of your well-perfum'd pray'r. Crashaw.
They fed, and, flut'ring, by degrees withdrew. Dryden.
2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.
Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.
No rag, no scrap of all the beau or wit,
That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ. Pope's Dunc.
3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations.
Ye spirits! to your charge repair;
The flut'ring fan be Zephyretta's care. Pope.
They the tall mast above the vessel rear,
Or teach the flut'ring sail to float in air. Pope's Odyssey.
4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly; to be in a state of uncertainty.
The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and with what difficulty, and how long the flutted upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surpris'd.
Howel's Vocal Forest.
It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or disagreement of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or flick only in founts of doubtful signification. Locke.
Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance, Produc'd by atoms from their flut'ring dance! Prior.
Some never arrive at any deep, solid, or valuable knowledge, because they are perpetually fluttering over the surface of things. Watts.
His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering, and cannot be fix'd attentively to a few ideas successively. Watts.
- To FLUTTER. v. a.
7. To drive in disorder, like a flock of birds suddenly roused.

- Like an eagle in a dovecoat, I Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli. Shak. Coriolanus.
2. To hurry the mind.
3. To disorder the position of any thing.
FLUTTER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Vibration; undulation; quick and irregular motion.
An infinite variety of motions are to be made use of in the flutter of a fan: there is the angry flutter, the modest flutter, and the timorous flutter. Addison's Spectator, N. 102.
2. Hurry; tumult; disorder of mind.
3. Confusion; irregular position.
FLUTTERICK. adj. [flutiatricus, Latin.] Belonging to rivers.
FLUX. n. f. [fluxus, Latin; flux, French.]
1. The act of flowing; passage.
The most simple and primary motion of fire is a flux, in a direct line from the centre of the fuel to its circumference.
Digby on Bodies.
By the perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbutnot.
2. The state of passing away and giving place to others.
The heat of the sun in animals whose parts are successive, and in a continual flux, can produce a deep and perfect gloss of blackness. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 10.
What the stated rate of interest should be, in the constant change of affairs, and flux of money, is hard to determine. Locke.
In the constituent matter of one body, turning naturally to another like body, the stock or fund can never be exhausted, nor the flux and alteration sensible. Woolward.
Languages, like our bodies, are in a perpetual flux, and stand in need of recruits to supply the place of those words that are continually falling through disuse. Felton on the Claff.
3. Any flow or issue of matter.
Quinces stop fluxes of blood. Arbutnot on Diet.
4. Dysentery; disease in which the bowels are excoriated and bleed; bloody flux.
Eat eastern spice, secure
From burning fluxes and hot calenture. Hallifax.
5. Excrement; that which falls from bodies.
Civet is the very uncleanly flux of a cat. Shakespeare.
6. Concourse; confluence.
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakespeare. As you like it.
7. The state of being melted.
8. That which mingled with a body makes it melt.
FLUX. adj. [fluxus, Latin.] Unconstant; not durable; maintained by a constant succession of parts.
To FLUX. v. a.
1. To melt.
2. To falivate; to evacuate by spitting.
He might fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or fluxed into another world. Saith.
- FLUXILITY. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.] Easiness of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction.
Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed aversion of nature to a vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least fluxility of the bodies here below. Boyle.
- FLUXION. n. f. [fluxio, Latin.]
1. The act of flowing.
2. The matter that flows.
3. [In mathematics.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small or infinitely small quantity, which, being taken an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity given.
A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life. Watts.
- To FLY. pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown. v. n. [flegan, Saxon.
To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown.
To flee is to escape, or go away, flean, Saxon, and makes fled. They are now confounded.]
1. To move through the air with wings.
Ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. Gen. i. 20.
These men's hastiness the warier sort of you do not commend: ye with they had held themselves longer in, and not com-flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown. Hooker.
2. To pass through the air.
Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Job v.
3. To pass away.
Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme,
Help thee to pass the tedious time,
Which else would on thy hand remain;
Though flown, it ne'er looks back again. Prior.
4. To pass swiftly.
The scouts with flying speed
Return, and through the city spread the news.
Earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Dryden.
5. To

FLY

5. To spring with violence; to fall on suddenly.
A fervant that he bred, thril'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, thereat enrag'd,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead. Shakefp.
Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and bark and fly at him. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat. South's Sermons.
6. To move with rapidity.
Glad to catch this good occasion,
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
A fair example to his master gave;
He bafas heads, to save his own, made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, must die. Waller.
7. To burst asunder with a sudden explosion.
Behold, a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.
8. To break; to shiver.
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
A fair example to his master gave;
He bafas heads, to save his own, made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, must die. Waller.
9. [flean, Saxon; fliehen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. [In this sense the verb is properly to flee, when fled is formed; but the following examples shew that they are confounded.]
Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spenser.
Macduff is fled to England. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake. Zuch. xiv. 5.
Abiathar escap'd, and fled after David. 1 Sa. xxii. 20.
What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,
Reviv'd the drooping arts again;
If science rais'd her head,
And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled. Dryden.
He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.
I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;
From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
Forfake mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.
10. To fly in the face. To insult.
This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself. Swift's Drapier's Letters.
11. To act in defiance.
Fly in nature's face:
—But how, if nature fly in my face first?
—Then nature's the aggressor. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
12. To FLY off. To revolt.
Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;
The images of revolt, and flying off. Shakespeare. King Lear.
The traitor Syphax
13. To FLY out. To burst into passion.
How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks. Ben. John's Catil.
Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier of Friendship.
14. To FLY out. To break out into licence.
You use me like a courser spur'd and rein'd:
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dryden.
Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but in times of war, when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent.
Dryden's Medal, Dedicat.
15. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.
All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley's Sermons.
16. To let FLY. To discharge.
The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, let fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky. Granville.
To be light and unencumbered: as, a flying camp.
To FLY. v. a.
1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.
Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues. Shakefp.
O Jove, I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakespeare.
If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it. Bacon's Essays.
O whether shall I run, or which way fly
The fight of this horrid spectacle. Milton's Agonistes.
2. To refuse association with.
Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares oppress,
And his toils'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 13.
Nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.
3. To quit by flight.

FOA

- Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who sail'd in air. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
4. To attack by a bird of prey.
If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.
5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape;
flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded.
FLY. n. f. [flego, Saxon.]
1. A small winged insect of many species.
As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare's King Lear.
My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn. Locke.
To prevent the fly, some propose to sow ashes with the seed. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To heedless flies the window proves
A constant death. Thomson's Summer.
2. That part of a machine which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalises the motion of the rest.
If we suppose a man tied in the place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground. Wilkins.
3. FLY, in a compass. That part which points how the wind blows.
To FLY'LOW. v. a. [fly and blew.] To taint with flies; to fill with maggots.
I cannot discern any labyrinth, unless in the perplexity of his own thoughts; for I am unwilling to believe that he doth it with a design to play tricks, and to flyblow my words, to make others distrust them. Stillingfleet.
Like a flyblown cake of tallow;
Or, on parchment, ink turn'd yellow. Swift.
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and flyblow in the setting sun. Pope's Epistles.
- FLY'BOAT. n. f. [fly and boat.] A kind of vessel nimble and light for sailing.
FLYCA'TCHER. n. f. [fly and catch.] One that hunts flies.
There was more need of Brutus in Domitian's days, to redeem or mend, than of Horace, to laugh at a flycatcher. Dry.
The swallow was a flycatcher as well as the spider. L'Estr.
- FLY'ER. n. f. [from fly.]
1. One that flies or runs away.
They hit one another with darts, as the others do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the flyer. Sandy's Journey.
He grieves so many Britons should be lost;
Taking more pains, when he beheld them yield,
To save the flyers than to win the field. Waller.
2. One that uses wings.
3. The fly of a jack.
4. [In architecture.] Stairs made of an oblong square figure, whose fore and backides are parallel to each other, and so are their ends: the second of these flyers stands parallel behind the first, the third behind the second, and so are said to fly off from one another. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
- To FLY'FISH. v. n. [fly and fish.] To angle with a hook baited with a fly.
I shall next give you some other directions for fly-fishing. Walton's Angler.
- FOAL. n. f. [fola, Saxon.] The offspring of a mare, or other beast of burthen. The custom now is to use colt for a young horse, and foal for a young mare; but there was not originally any such distinction.
Also flew his steed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind,
As he had been a foal of Pegasus's kind. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Twenty she-afes and ten foals. Gen. xxxii. 15.
- To FOAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth a foal.
Give my horse to Timon: it foals me straight Ten able horses. Shakespeare's Timon.
Such colts as are
Of generous race, straight, when they first are foal'd, Walk proudly. May's Georgicks.
About September take your mares into the house, where keep them 'till they foal. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- FOALBIT. } n. f. Plants.
FOALFOOT. }
FOAM. n. f. [fram, Saxon.] The white substance which agitation or fermentation gathers on the top of liquors; froth; spume.
The foam upon the water. Def. x. 7.
Whitening, down their mossy tinctur'd stream Descends the billowy foam. Thomson's Spring.
- To FOAM. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To froth; to gather foam.
What a beard of the general's cut will do among foaming bottles and ale-wash'd wits, is wonderful. Shakefp. Henry V.
Cæsar fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.
